- Reasonable space design: the internal space of the debris box is relatively spacious, and all kinds of daily items can be placed, such as documents, manuals, wallets, mobile phones, etc. For example, the co-pilot glove box of some models can hold about 6 bottles of water, and the central armrest box also has a large space for cans and drinks.
- The detailed design is user-friendly: there are many places in the car where mobile phones can be placed, which is convenient for drivers and passengers to access at any time. Some debris boxes may have damping devices, which can be carried out slowly when switching to avoid impact and noise. Some also set up special places to insert cards. For example, under the button to adjust the height of the light, it is convenient to place cards such as oil cards, and they are damped so that the cards will not shake.
- Diversification of functions: In addition to the conventional debris storage function, some debris boxes are also equipped with USB interfaces to facilitate the charging of electronic devices. For example, the storage compartment in front of the shift lever can not only hold the mobile phone, but also have two USB interfaces under it, which can be used to charge the mobile phone.
- Convenient location: It is usually located near the front seats, which is convenient for drivers and passengers to pick up items during driving. For example, the storage compartment near the center console allows the driver to easily place and pick up common items.
- Rich storage space: In addition to the debris box, there are also many other storage spaces in the car, such as the front door panel storage compartment, the rear door panel storage compartment, the storage compartment under the rear central armrest box, etc., which can meet the diversified storage needs of drivers and passengers. For example, the storage compartment of the four doors is large, which can be used for mineral water, water cups, towels and other items.
